
advice of a friend when George was a boy, but this friend was no longer a mere friend of his parents. He was a gentleman of another age and background, and it was he who had actually delivered this cruel piece of advice. The fact was that George had not fallen in love at first sight with his mistress, but it had occurred to her that he was in love with another and she had accordingly suggested to her friend that he should marry the lady in order to make the situation worse for him. This was what she said, though not in those words. "He will have no pleasure in life until he has satisfied his passion. I think there was some such girl in his childhood--I am sure of it. Some one who looked like his wife--his young mother, as I suppose it was." And this friend had spoken the truth. Though the years had gone by and George had never married, there remained from those days something that resembled the image of his wife. "What one never forgets," said the friend, "is the way in which some one or other will always, always outlive a man like Georgie. It seems as if they would always be there as a sort of freshness, a girlishness, their own little secret." Full story[Epidemiologic study of primary hyperparathyroidism. Basic principles and clinical aspects]. In a population of 1,059 patients with hyperparathyroidism (HPT), the incidence of asymptomatic primary HPT is 1.9% (18 p. 100), calculated with the subtraction method: the number of patients with asymptomatic primary HPT is 18 out of 1,049 patients with HPT. The location of the parathyroid glands is described on the basis of the exact localization of non-localized primary HPT found in 50 patients (4.5 p. 100): 34 of these patients had a non-localized primary HPT. In most cases, localization was made by specific imaging techniques (sonography, CT and angiography) and was assisted by the sestamibi technique. Using the Ki-S1 method and scintigraphy, detection of parathyroid adenoma and hyperplasia is simple. Only two of the 18 asymptomatic patients with primary HPT, have a multiple adenoma. The number of glands was the following: in seven cases two parathyroid adenomas were found (one in two patients), the number of glands was three in two cases, four glands in three cases (two of them with hyperplasia and one adenoma), five in two cases, six glands in one case, and seven in one case with hyperplasia. The types of localization that should be used are discussed, as well as the identification of a normal gland and the parathyroid glands. Attention is drawn to the similarity between localized and non-localized primary HPT.Q: Which type is better for deep understanding of source code I am working on a project with a friend of mine that is a template engine (the way I understand is like smarty). I do not understand the template language which is used, so I prefer a simple html source code to read. Does anyone know any book that introduces the source code of a template engine? A: You want to be looking for a 'real' template engine. There are plenty of template engines around, but most are static, tied to a specific type of syntax. For example, this is Smarty: Template Inheritance is one of the most powerful yet underused features of Smarty. With inheritance, you can create complex templates from "simple
